The Library's Latest: A Note from the Coordinator

Greetings Everyone!
Continuing with last month's focus on new Supported Employment books, you will notice another 7 excellent titles that have been cataloged and added into the collection. Like last month's features, these titles should nicely supplement the Supported Employment section, which now has its own Subject List, accessible here:

<http://uscm.med.sc.edu/cdr/supportedemployment.htm>

I recently handed out a number of these Subject Lists at the Employment Works! Conference, which was held at the Radisson Hotel here in Columbia on January 25th and 26th. The conference was funded in part by the CMS Medicaid Infrastructure Grant Program, and was a big success. You all make sure to congratulate Mavis Riley for her part in helping to organize this important gathering!

It's Your Turn at Bat is written by Barbara Aiello

and Jeffrey Shulman and Illustrated by Loel Barr is about Mark Riley who has cerebral palsy. His teacher Mr. Beame has a surprise box full of story ideas. He was hoping to get his baseball hero Roberto Clemente. His friend Brenda got his hero. Instead he got "The Sewing Machine: How it Changed our Lives." He complained about the writing assignment. At the end of the book he did a good job. I loved this book because it helps you realize that there is no I in teamwork.
