Technical assistance is "a systematic process for transferring knowledge about early childhood research, practices that work, and policies to assist [professionals and the families they serve] to accomplish goals and plans for [individual and] systems change." (National Early Childhood Technical Assistance Center, 2006)

TECS provides technical assistance that promotes use of evidence-based early intervention practices that are congruent with federal law and state policy regarding delivery of family-centered early intervention services in natural environments. This includes, but is not limited to:

- o Researching and reviewing professional literature related to early intervention
- o Disseminating evidence-based practice information and resources through a variety of media
- o Generating research in topics of interest to early intervention practitioners
- o Contributing to development of early intervention communities of learning
- o Assisting BabyNet System personnel in implementation of evidence-based early intervention practices
- o Developing training resources in multiple formats
