Accessing E-Journals

During this tutorial module, you will learn how to access full text e-journals using the Library’s E-Journals database.

This tutorial is approximately 4 minutes long.
Suppose we want to find the full text for this article:

We would start by searching the Library’s E-Journals database.
Accessing E-Journals Module

Or you can click the E-Journals link. Click the E-JOURNALS link in the turquoise box below to access our E-Journals database.

This is the E-Journals database. You can use the search box to quickly determine whether we have access to a journal electronically.

You can see that the article is found in the journal Injury.

Type injury in the search box and click Search.

Our search results appear, which include any journal that has the word “injury” in the title.
Select the Full Text Access link under Injury to view the options.

You can use any of the publisher links below to access the journal, but you need to pay attention to the "Online Coverage" dates. We are looking for a 2007 issue, so either link (ClinicalKey Journals or ScienceDirect) would provide full text access.
Let's use ClinicalKey eJournals to access the full text. Select the ClinicalKey eJournals link above.

- Pressure characteristics of pelvic binders
  - Pages 118-121, Jowett, A.J.L., and Bowyer, G.W.
  - Introduction: Pelvic binders are being increasingly used in the initial stabilization of pelvic fractures. They can be quickly and easily applied in the accident and emergency department. They allow assessment of the patient for other injuries.

- The flaming gypsy skirt injury
  - Pages 122-124, Leong, S.C.L., Emecheta, I.E., and James, M.I.
  - Introduction: Clothing ignition burn injuries are common in developing countries, since open fires are used for cooking and warmth. The majority of victims are either women or teenage girls whose clothes caught fire from kerosene stoves or unguarde...

- Immediate application of improvised pelvic binder as first step in extended resuscitation from life-threatening hypovolaemic shock in conscious patients with unstable pelvic injuries
  - Introduction: The successful management of hypovolaemic patients with unstable pelvic injuries hinges upon rapid recognition and immediate reduction of the pelvic injuries, which effects a tamponade of bleeding by decreasing the intra-pelvic volume.

Let's look at some other search tips for accessing e-journals.

If you wanted to see what journals the library owns that have the word Neurology in the title, simply search for the word Neurology.

Type Neurology in the search box now and click Search.

In this example, the publisher has restricted access to the most recent 12 months of the European Journal of Neurology. (In other words, you would be able to view the articles one year after publication.)

There is no full text delay (embargo) note for the Wiley Online Library link. You would use this link to access the most recent articles for this journal.
Here’s another example of when you would want to search our E-Journals database:

Many of our databases provide links to full text journal articles. However, if you find a citation without a link to full text, remember to search the E-Journals database to check for availability.
Finally, if you can’t find a particular journal in the E-Journals database, you can search the Catalog by selecting the Catalog search box on the Library’s homepage. The Catalog will let you know if we own the journal in print.

During this tutorial, we looked at ways to search the E-Journals database to access e-journals.
